introduction
by andrew c. dill

Most of you are dead. Not dead in the 'Me an you afterschool!' sense, but rather in the pushing up daisies, fish food sense. This may be hard for you to take. You died sometime around the millennium. Large factions of terrorists, survivalists and whatnot, in a myriad of uncoordinated attempts, managed to take out a large portion of the worlds population. It started with some bombings at about 10am eastern time-may have been earlier-I didn't hear most of this shit until a few weeks later. It progressed with a wash of attacks across the globe. Most of the large US cities were hit with Russian nukes. Not that the Russians sent them, just that they built them.

I was in New York City. It happened when we were on a train to Brooklyn under the east river. Riding on a subway, you become ignorant of whatever seismic events are happening. When we walked out of the station there was glimmering horizon in every direction. New York City wasn't there, everything I saw was glass. It took us a week to get back onto Long Island, which was being ravaged by young metal heads from the local towns. Fist fight 'em and they go down like a cheerleader on prom night. By the time we got to Mr. Chompers I had an army of sixteen year olds. I left half of them on the island, and took the others with me. I headed for North Attleboro. Word had it that Providence was wiped out by a large tidal wave, and the mall there would be too hard to defend. So I began to build The Empire of Rocket Queen from a fortified Emerald Square Mall.

It wasn't always like this. There was a time when most of you would have lived basically happy to a ripe old age. Again, you have me to thank. It's kind of a long convoluted story, but I will do my best to tell it.

It used to be that I celebrated the millennium with my friends in Brooklyn, nothing exciting happened-not in the atomic sense anyway. We were all let down, the world was the same, the only potential tragedy for our generation-our Vietnam, our great depression-was a bust. You get sick of buying shit after a while, you know. But so anyway, life progressed as normal. I graduated from RISD after five years, went on to be a decently successful animator.

I met her when I was twenty five, one of those almost Penthouse Letters sorts of interactions. It was in a McDonalds in Galva, Kansas. As far as I can remember it our conversation went something to the extent of:

"Takes a while for them to cook a burger, huh?"

"Yeah."

Next thing I know we are at a $10 a night motel making love like a pit of snakes. She's into water-sports; her pee tastes different; I am liking it. I am about to return the favor when I get a mammoth headache. I never get headaches. I double over, clutching my head and she starts flipping out-like mad at herself, not sorry for me. She is stomping around, punching the walls and swearing; I am on the floor clutching my head trying to think of something pleasant.

"You'll be fine in the future, You'll be fine in the future.." I keep repeating to myself in a pained whisper. The woman responds in a way that confuses me. And then it's all gone, the headache, the woman, the room. I am bare ass naked (I had my socks on before) clutching my head in a tourist bureau.

A lady with weird ass hair runs over to me excited.

"Who are you?" She had a weird accent to boot.

After a very uncomfortable time with me naked and the weird hair lady, I discover that I am about five hundred years in the future and that the reason that the woman's urine tasted different was because it had a chemical for time travel in it. People take this drug that enables them to time travel, but they have to save their pee once they arrive so they can drink it and get the remaining chemical to return home. It tastes good as the scientists' condolences for making you have to drink your own pee. So me and this lady traded places. They ask me to go home, leak into that lady's mouth and send her back here with my sweet tasting piss. I tell them to shove it.

So the future is all like crazy corporate, Coke runs one government, Pepsi another. Everyone has tattoos for products. Some of the more unfortunate, stupid or whatever, have them on their foreheads. I have no idea what the products are, but everyone with the 'Nolone' tat seems to be very depressed.

After getting a job in advertising (mostly I sort of puppeteer cigarettes) I begin to get the history of what happened. It was all because of this one girl, who like fifty years before went back in time and saved the world. Averted the whole disaster by like stopping one person. The gilded book on her, which weights about seven pounds, calls it the 'holding of the first domino in the chain'. That's how everyone refers to it. The book is required reading in grammar school and again in high school. Every depiction of her has her wearing Reeboks, a Tommy Hilfiger jacket and drinking a Cherry Coke. One girl. There are big statues of her almost everywhere. They tell me that one of the statues is over a kilometer high. Long story short: I get fed up with the future so I want to kill that girl. I go to a tourist bureau-all-right here is the thing, everyone is always thinking how if you mess with the past that you will totally destroy the present (slash) future. Not true-sort of. You see, messing with the past is like throwing rocks down a mountain. You may change something, but the mountainside stays overall the same. That is what they tell you to reassure you at the tourist bureau. What they don't tell you that sometimes when you chuck a rock down a mountain it causes a landslide. I get to her ten minutes before she saves the world and kill her. I die of a stomach wound five days later, but it doesn't matter since back in 2000 I will become the king of North Attleboro, re-unite New England and leave it for my young son Kathy to rule over.

Leroy White lives in a farmhouse, with a barn serving as his studio, just across the former orchard-pasture from my homestead, a mock Tudor. We also share the RISD landscape of converted mills, banks, and insurance buildings of every American decade. He asks me to drop by each semester to compare native Providence storytelling to his own rather redneck, homeboy, Kentucky traditions.

My colleague and neighbor Leroy recounts boyhood adventures with shotguns and wild cars careening down country roads. "I told my mother I was hunting frogs. I was joining a gang to chase off somebody who came courting a girl who had a 'reputation.' It turned out he married her, they raised a family together."

The tales I bring to his freshman design class jump from one topic to another. Leroy likes me to include some New York romantic stories among my oldtime Providence anecdotes. The past few semesters I have indulged in confiding all sorts of memories that come with getting to be an elder. Reminiscences of college days and dates, yarns about high hopes and steep falls, poetic pictures of the Paris of my youth and the RISD of my first years as an English teacher. And the struggles to secure a full-time position, to safeguard it, to procure promotion, sometimes over administrative opposition, and to win recognition, however slight, for community contributions. Leroy acted as faculty grievance chair, sat on the committee for faculty appointments and advancements, and even the development fund that distributes grants. He earned a sabbatical sojourn in the southland to study regional storytelling. We may seem an odd couple in a classroom, but we heated up telephone lines and charged the air at hearing and union meetings some seasons ago, bonding and binding us.

Sometimes my counsel to freshmen goes over well. Kids like a change of routine and style. I go in for surprise and even slight shock. Other days, I resist repeating some twice told tale, like a circus act or a vaudeville performance. I may refuse to let Leroy bully me into indiscreet chapters of my career. The time I wrote overwrought letters to school newsletters in the interest of preserving an old building, or got in some trouble with the law for a protest gesture in the Viet-nam era.

Before our local Holocaust Memorial Museum went up at the J.C.C. site, I sought the tower of Carr House on the RISD campus as the home for a proposed museum-sponsored collection of the art of Theresienstadt. Far from winning approval, I watched officers and trustees, some colleagues and deans pull back from my Jewish "coming out." By now, some of the best projects among the graduating classes deal forthrightly and elegantly with Jewish symbols and issues, but we're talking a decade and a half ago.

Instead of getting into all that controversy, I only rant and rave about my personal, philosophical and spiritual views. How a disciple of beauty should drink at the fountain of knowledge, history, many a quaint and curious volume of forgotten lore and lyric film of yore. I do make some friends from these visits to Leroy's class. I'm sure I also create an oddball impression.

This most recent rendezvous took place in the Washington Insurance Building. I remember when it went up: I watched it from the bus I used to take after school. I'm the type who always hates to see a structure come crashing down to make room for a proud new block of bricks wiping out memory, chasing off ghosts, knocking down little lives, the souls of weeds, trees, birds, even mice. But by now of course, the phony colonial postwar unit with its fake pillars nevertheless boasts some luxurious appointments indoors, looking backward to the deco materials of previous decades. I've grown to like using the space volume to make my appearance, like a gypsy with a fiddle, only with mere ballads in direct words.

I came, I saw, I left behind a few fragments.

When I first got to know Leroy White, he had just undergone an operation on a brain tumor. He wears the silver i.d. bracelet that warns an orderly about his condition. Part of his own gift to the college is his awareness of physical dangers to artists, and his respect for the importance of health benefits for teachers, who are more vulnerable than they must appear to students, department heads, even staff. He keeps in touch with retired colleagues. He has a trace of southern courtesy that runs like a hidden river even through the accent that goes up and down across the Mason Dixon line like a Stephen Foster melody. Or like the migrating birds that Leroy knows and feeds on his Highland Avenue lawn.

I worry about my longtime chum I've drunk a couple of pewter pots with and sat around conference tables with.

"Har'ya doin'?" he drawls. And then I show up when he asks me to and take off again and go back to my own routine. I write this report as a summing up of something we share - I guess it comes back down to storytelling, keeping accounts and tabs, once or twice as the school years fly past us.

I have talked to you. You have spoken or written to me. You graduate into my memory as perhaps a part of me goes with you. Maybe we even invent each other, crafting ideas of our own and giving out and taking credit. Whatever you think you learned at RISD you also brought and left. What keeps me dropping by at Leroy's classes each semester during your years here is the opportunity to experience the design of storytelling, the strangeness of putting a memory into a new context, finding something of you within my tales and lighting up a shadow with your smiles. I like the contrast between what I am and do and Leroy's tradition and taste, the walls with your work wrapped around my narratives like a protective fortress in a castle tower of both intimacy and the violation of privacy.

I guess that's my carrier pigeon postage, such as it is - that all you have is what you have done and lived, failures and successes, so you have to risk everything on that. I come to class wearing my South Park cap because that's about the only show on television that I can bear watching. It breaks every boundary of good taste and straightforward logic, all the rules of judgment, but at least it has no canned laughter or formula script, no brutal, obvious message, only its own absurd freshness. You do the same, and turn RISD into something more than an alma mater - institutions may let you down - but rather a mirage of happiness where dreams are shared.
